PARIS LETTER.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Paris, April 4.

Boileau addressed a sonnet to the eye-brow, or bag-wig, of Louis XIV, wherein the flatterer wrote, "Sire, cease to conquer, or I cease to write" this was of course before the Sun

King left his Kingdom in the last stages of material and moral misery.

Had the Republic a poet laureate, he might grind a few lines imploring Gambetta to cease to conquer. That eminent patriot is rapidly ripening not only into the first statesman in France, but of Europe, for his recent banquet addresses have a general application. He claims to represent the good sense of France, and pours out the vials of his wrath on topicals, practical politics, and programmes that can be worked out by time and estimated by results.

This he calls opportunism, and demands what public men would undertake a policy of opportunism.

Gambetta has at last got rid of his tail, the intransigent's who intend to follow him must stand up for a Republic, he must stand up
